

Like most geniuses, twenty-four year old "Eros" Harold Kalibala keeps it moving. From the Third Coast to the Midwest, to the West Coast Eros has always been on the go... until a brutal tackle in a college football game left him strapped to a hospital bed. After leaving Houston to play ball, Harold had to find a new place where he never really had a home.

What he found was that his home lied deep within the music. It was on a cold Cincinnati hospital bed where Kalibala first began to create lyrics and melodies unique to his global life experience. Years of travel, performing, life experiences, and advice from very talented friends and family help cultivate the artist he is today.

Eros' sound lies somewhere between East Africa and the American South – an earnest, cutting flow, set against original beats. There's intellect in his confident delivery, heart in his soulful mood, and drive in his outsider approach to the game. Packaged together, there's no singer-songwriter out there like him. Eros' music hits hard and changes minds.
